

Efficacy and Safety of High-Intensity Statin Therapy in Primary Prevention

A. R. Mehta, J. L. Okafor, S. Kowalski, D. Fernandez

doi: 10.1016/S0140-6736(23)01234-5

Abstract

Background: Statins reduce cardiovascular events, yet their role in low-risk primary prevention remains debated. We conducted a randomized controlled trial across 42 centres. Methods: A total of 8,214 adults without prior cardiovascular disease were randomized to high-intensity statin therapy or placebo. Findings: High-intensity statin therapy reduced the composite endpoint of myocardial infarction and stroke by 27 percent over five years.

Introduction

[illegible]